contrast. The music had a tendency to be atonal, which suggested more of a Robert Crumb than a Skip Scott movement. And yet, in the more uncategorizable films, Scott's insistence on unusual sounds and even unusual forms for music allowed what some other directors would have found distasteful to become part of their expressive movement. Elle Fanning: I was first exposed to the work of Frank Zappa when I was in elementary school and it was the soundtrack to “The Great Misfits”. I think that was the first time I really became aware of the power of music as an independent force. Music could be used to transcend the limits of language. I hope to continue to move forward in my explorations of music and other media by avoiding traditional boundaries.

Brandon Scott Johnson: The first time I really became aware of music was when my dad gave me a guitar for Christmas (I was like four years old) and I tried to play some chords out of “Sgt.

Pepper’s Lonely Hearts Club Band”, but it was so hard. Brian Harvey: I had been into music for as long as I can remember. My father taught himself piano by listening to the Bee Gees and playing their records while my siblings and I learned music. I felt driven to make “music” by the time I learned how to play xylophone at age 7. My first band was called The Anthrojunkies. We would march around our neighborhood playing xylophone “serenades”. My parents had no idea what we were doing, but I felt that it’s something I was destined to do and I wasn’t about to stop. I had an extremely difficult time getting into college. I started taking business courses and one day I was out for a jog and I heard music playing that I had written. It came out a little too happy for my circle of friends and I decided that was not me.

So I went back to more academic pursuits and learned guitar shortly after that. I went on to learn drums and booked a show

In the early 1940s, a new nuclear submarine began being developed: the Nomad. The Nomad was a further development of the Sturgeon. The basic concept was the addition of a watertight bow that would allow the submarine to float freely under the sea. Other features included a crew of 110 men, 4 torpedo tubes, and the ship had a displacement of 4900 tons. The submarine proved to be a disappointment due to a number of issues. The Nomad firstly, had no need for batteries. It ran on a small nuclear reactor that was situated in the forward end of the hull, and fed power to a small motor that turned the propeller. The bow section was solidified water, so the Nomad could float at any depth. They also didn't have the problems with electromagnetic interference that plagued the Sturgeon and Vanguard. There were also arguments over the unusual bow section. With the end of the Second World War looming, it was decided to cancel the Nomad project. Instead, the project was concentrated on the other two types, the Musketeer and the Kingfish. The Musketeer was ultimately cancelled in 1950, and the Kingfish proved to be a poor performer. One of the problems was caused by an accident in which one of the batteries ruptured, and one of the men died from mercury poisoning. Popular food chains like Del Monte, Taco Bell and Five Guys have announced plans to hire 10,000 new employees over the next five years in an effort to keep up with a growing number of consumers who are “dipping” into their pockets for more food. Taco Bell, which has restaurants in more than 5,700 locations nationwide, plans to hire 5,000 new workers over the next five years to prepare food for customers and stock the shelves. In line with its new food-centric menu, Taco Bell is overhauling its menu with new options and launching a new "to-go" delivery system to
