Four Canon Law Code, which contains the Code of Canons of the EasternQ: What is tautology and counterfactual? I've been a "Dummies" book reader and still struggling with the meaning of the following terms. Can anyone clarify for me what "tautology" and "counterfactual" mean, please? A: Tautology is a term used to mean: A sentence asserting or denying the same fact is called a tautology. The terms tautology and tautograph are also used to refer to a tautological consequence: a sentence that can be deduced from a set of other sentences without the use of inference and deduction. Grammatically tautology is a conjunction of two declaratives that are synonymous and identical. A counterfactual is a hypothesis that implies something false. A tautology would not be a counterfactual because the truth or falsity of the relevant declaratives is not contingent on its being the case. A counterfactual would be a hypothetical. Example 1: It's raining outside and there is a pie. It's raining outside and there is a pie implies A. A is false. Example 2: If it was raining outside, there is a pie. It was raining outside. If it was raining outside, there is a pie implies A. A is true. Example 3: If we go down the hall, there is a pie. We are going down the hall. If we go down the hall, there is a pie implies A. A is false. Example 4: If we go down the hall, there is a pie. We are not going down the hall. If we go down the hall, there is a pie implies A. A is false. Example 5: There is a closed door. We are not breaking the door. If we break the door, there is a pie. If there is a pie, the door is broken. The door is not broken. The door is closed. If there is a pie, the door is closed. If the door is closed, we are not breaking it. We are not breaking the door. The door is not broken. Example 6: If we go down the hall, there is a pie. We are not going down the hall. If the door is not broken, there is a pie. If the door is not
