Lootbox RPG is an Indian action role-playing web browser MMORPG franchise, based on Lootbox written and developed by Tustain Software. Lootbox RPG is set in a fantasy world where the continent of Glest sits and the game centers around three independent guilds, each trying to complete their quest from the invaders. A problem for the invading forces is that two of the guilds are the descendants of once great military houses and their spirits of the past are now defending their homelands against the invaders. Originally a browser-based game that requires no downloads and players are only given a virtual keyboard to control the movement of the character, the current version of the game is an HTML5 game, now Playable with Adobe Flash Player or Amazon Fire. The game also has a mobile version, with the mobile version requiring the use of internet. Tustain decided to make the game playable on computers and mobile devices which eventually resulted in its release on Steam and iOS. Gameplay Players start off on the opening island of D'znu, an idyllic and beautiful setting in the Northern Zone in Glest, where the invasion forces raid the island for resources. The first island provides a good base to progress to higher islands, and eventually, the continent if the player wishes to. The key being that players need to unlock the bigger islands. The unlocking system is a lootbox-esque system where players can buy crates that contain either randomly generated Gold, Arcane Crystals, or Silver. Players can purchase the lootboxes with real money through two ways. first, players can buy lootboxes directly from the game's interface, there are no purchases or additional costs involved; the game offers a free currency, epsilon, which can be used to open lootboxes Players also have the option to open the lootboxes using Arcane Crystals (game currency) only, which will be refunded if the player owns a box, and the currency can only be bought from the game interface or collected from the monsters that the players run into while exploring. The currency can also be used to purchase upgrades for player abilities. The virtual keyboard of the game controls the movement of the player (Horizontal axis) and attack (vertical axis). The movement is both forward and sideways. The game requires a relatively fast internet connection to play, due to the occasional loading screens and some of the resource-demanding areas. Story The setting of the

A: A: From a technical standpoint the game is entirely mediocre, from a mechanics standpoint it is the complete opposite. The controls are good and the game is made well enough to get you from point A to point B. But the problem is that the content is so small and the gameplay is so minimalistic that it is hard to get engrossed in the narrative. The game is more "slow and steady vs. fast and furious". I found the game to be too linear, easy to get caught up in the little puzzles you encounter on the way, but hard to find a reason to keep going without doing multiple playthroughs. However, there was more variety in the game if you allowed yourself to go more around the world than to just trek through the map. I could start in the Swamps of Farran, progress to the mountains of Eraina, or maybe venture into the jungles of the Dark Grove and Farran. Or I could go west, travel to the city of Izzin, then cross the
