Distribution of total tannins in the European epopsidea daphne (Asteraceae), a European endemice of Mediterranean and Central Asia to China. Revue Espécially Plantes Mediterranéennes 2019, 9 (11) 9 (11) 1. Introduction {#peer4425-sec-0001} =============== Tannins, a major class of plant secondary compounds, are widely distributed in the plant kingdom; they are part of chloroplasts (chlorophylls) in all higher plants and they are widespread in bryophytes and pteridophytes. Tannins are also present in fungi, insects and marine animals. In the lignin biosynthetic pathway, tannins are joined to lignin by tannase (polyphenol oxidase)-like enzymes. Tannins participate in the interdependence plant--fungus interactions and may provide plant protection against insects and pathogens. Tannins are present in many fruits, cereals, legumes, nuts, sugar beet, and other food materials (Seini, De Vincenzo, Fava, & Galletta, 2005{ref-type="ref"}). Many medicinal plants are also rich in tannins. There is a great deal of interest in natural tannins because they are the most commonly used compounds for the prophylaxis and therapy of civilization diseases. Moreover, tannins are active agents against some insects and a wide spectrum of different pathogenic microorganisms, because they exert direct toxic effects and also influence iron ions available to bacteria (Banaszewska & Żmuda, 2008{ref-type="ref"}; Fernández-Aguayo, Manay, F., Navarro, & López-Huertas, 2009{ref-type="ref"}; Valdés, Moreno, F., Haculla, & González-Sánchez, [2012](#peer4425-b
