Questions: I think installing all updates is a bad idea. If you can help me find a solution to block the updates, please let me know. If my current installation is in a (virtual?) RAMdisk, is there anything I need to do to my live USB for it to behave like it is running on bare RAM (i.e. to prevent the update manager from seeing updates)? Also consider installing dconf from The scripts in /etc/apt/apt.conf.d/ directory come from update-rc.d package. They are used to control update processes of some programs on your system. They are executable shell scripts that can be read with your favourite text editor, e.g. vi or less. Setting which applications to handle package updates is done in the packages.list (and sources.list files in /etc/apt/ directory, see Q: Meaning of []
