Q: Github webhook push I'm new to Github. My app is in Apache, if that matters. I've added a webhook on my repository. My issue is I want to trigger my app when a push is made on the master branch. I have a cron job to trigger a update function when it finds a change on master, but I want to react to a push. What triggers github to generate a webhook? I'd like to get the push message for debugging purposes. Thanks. A: EDIT: I previously suggested using the Webhooks. This is not recommended. I suggest you see Github's official guides on how to setup a push to poll. An alternate way, as mentioned by @wootwoot, is to use the Process Changes API. If you want to monitor and trigger a job on master branch changes, you can use GitHub's Process Changes API. This means that you need to send a POST request to the GitHub's server for each type of change you'd like to trigger. You can send GET requests to URL, like mentioned in the previous post, as well as POST requests, as described on the official Github Documentation. You have to send several requests (as many as changes that are triggered). Example of your requests: send a GET request to 04aeff104c
