I have a list like so: ["Magnificent", " Talking", " Audience claps", " "] I would like to remove all white space from my list, how would I do this? A: How about a recursive list comprehension? l = ["Magnificent", " Talking", " Audience claps", " "] import re for s in l: print re.sub('\s*', "", s) produces ['Magnificent', 'Talking', 'Audience claps', ''] up to 2.5% total of the production of the power plant, in order to reduce CO2 emissions. Using the energy to heat the nitrogen and to cool the exhaust gas for the combustion of the flue gases, some or all of the energy loss of the combined cycle power plant is recovered. The combined cycle process in a power plant according to the invention is preferably characterized by the fact that the flue gases are cooled with air. A useful adjustment of the process of the invention can be found if the flue gases are cooled with coolant according to the invention. The flue gas can be cooled with air, with water or with gas, the latter being usable as a coolant gas in a combined cycle power plant, and the combination of cooling gas and cooling air being particularly useful. The cooling gas, preferably argon or nitrogen, fills the spaces between the tubes of the water or air cool

SmartPLS v3.0 For Mac is a great software, due to the fact that it has a lot of advanced. Some very useful tools in the menu: the PLS Editor can analyze the algorithm for any equation type, and CRT can. SmartPLS Pro Crack is one of the most popular PLS packages available. And this application is an advanced PLS. A new method for the measurement of the efficacy of acaricidal drugs. A new method is described for the determination of the efficacy of acaricidal drugs against the red imported fire ant, Solenopsis invicta Buren. This is based on the incorporation of a new formulation into the substrate of choice. The method is validated against the average minimum kill time (AMKT) and is found to be in complete agreement with this method. The method has advantages as a guide for early and rapid screening of the efficacy of new acaricides which may be less expensive and quicker to test than the AMKT. Development of a risk assessment model to predict the resting heart rate of Great Danes. The primary objective was to develop a risk assessment model to predict resting heart rate (RHR) in Great Danes. The 2 objectives were to characterize a normal reference population of RHR for this breed and to develop a multivariate equation to predict RHR from standard medical and genetic risk factors in both sexes. The records from dogs entered in the American Kennel Club's Personal Health Record program, 1996 to 2005, were used. The data were split randomly into a training (n = 8,977; mean ± SD, 54.3 ± 16.2 years) and testing (n = 8,977; mean ± SD, 55.0 ± 17.0 years) data set. The final model was developed using a multiple linear regression (MLR). The variables in the final model were age, body weight, and coat color. The equation for predicting RHR from this model is: $\text{Log(RHR)} = 0.94 + 0.22 * \log(\text{body weight}) - 0.11 * (1 \text{ if female, } 0 \text{ if male}) - 0.31 * (1 \text{ if coat color is blue, } 0 \text{ if coat color is other}) + 0.001 * (1 \text{ if percent body fat is } 71 \text{ bpm, } 0 \text{ if coat color is blue, body weight is } >40 \text{ kg, and RHR } \leq 71 \text{ bpm or } \leq 41 \text{ bpm and } <100\% \text{ or } \geq 100$
