What's New in the?

VideoCam is a program that acts as a virtual video capture device, allowing users to stream video files and images through a messenger with webcam support. videoCam is a low resource application, supporting less than 50 frames per second, which means for the best results is to simply run the program and stop the camera feed. Despite these limitations, videoCam is a serviceable program and offers the basic functionality of playing a media file through a messenger. For users that require a way to convert media files, the program has no useful features to simplify this and would require editing. An additional concern for users is the lack of documentation. With no information to look up and look for information regarding supported media formats, users will be forced to research them individually. Installation: Installing videoCam is a simple process, users are required to select the program from the start menu and an installation wizard will walk through the necessary steps to install. Once installed, users are required to restart the messenger, and then the videoCam icon is present in the webcam properties. Once there, videoCam can be enabled and configured. Main Properties: To configure videoCam, it requires access to properties. From there users can configure the following, starting with the main properties, which contain the webcam address and a switch to toggle between the webcam feed and the video cam feed. Webcam Feed: VideoCam supports the use of both Skype and Live Messenger for webcam feeds, enabling users to stream video files and images through a messenger with webcam support. By default, the webcam feed is used and users will be able to stream from the webcam that is being used, which may not be what users want. To switch to the webcam feed, users will need to go to the webcam properties, press the switch next to the webcam feed, toggle it to off and use the webcam feed to stream from. To enable the webcam feed, users will need to click on the check box and start the webcam feed. Video Cam Feed: If using the video cam feed, users will need to configure the video cam feed. The best aspect of videoCam, is that the webcam feed is enabled by default and no user interaction is needed. This is an added feature compared to other programs and services that users have to set up, as videoCam is enabled by default. When using the video cam feed, users will need to select the video cam feed from the drop down menu. From there, users can browse the media files that the program supports and select the media file that is to be used. Once selected, users will need to browse to the location of the media file and click the play button. The user will see the media file stream in a messenger, on the messenger when it is ended the user will need to go back to the videoCam properties, press the video cam feed and then toggle it off. Media Files: VideoCam does
