it was "hard to distinguish" prisoners from the staff. "I'm haunted by their faces," the head of the department, Mary Ann Ginez, said. Mina, a girl who lived with her grandmother at a detention center, was released to the government's custody in July and moved to the facility at the first sign of trouble. Her grandmother was released after two months. When she was finally allowed to leave the facility and reunite with her family in Manila, the girl got into her car and slumped over the steering wheel. "The only reason she got out is because she was crying," her grandmother said. Teresita, a Filipino asylum seeker who was working in Saudi Arabia, said she would not say how many fellow detainees at the detention center have perished, but that she knows of at least seven. Some die of hunger, she said, and many die of illnesses. "We have good rice and vegetables," she said, "but it's the same for all of us." Local officials and the Catholic church have protested the conditions. But migrant activists say the biggest worry is not the management but that the power structure will determine who leaves the facility
