to the cognate antigen is recognized as the first signal that elicits the antibody-dependent cell-mediated cytotoxicity (hereinafter referred to as "ADCC") of the effector cell. The second signal is an antigen-induced signal that can be recognized by the effector cell. As a result of these signal recognition, the effector cell causes cell-mediated cytotoxicity to take place on the surface of the target cell. ADCC is of crucial importance in the defense mechanism against tumors and viruses. ADCC involves the recognition of target cells by
