Shares of Chinese smartphone maker Xiaomi have surged 10% in Hong Kong after its co-founder and chief executive Lei Jun claimed that both Apple and Samsung are struggling in China, and that the market there is as important as the U.S. market. Lei also claimed that Xiaomi will have the biggest smartphone market share in China this year, despite Apple's iOS devices growing faster than Android in the country. Xiaomi reported a second-quarter net profit of 5.04 million yuan, or $823.236 million, net revenue of 50.28 billion yuan, or $8.4 billion and a net mobile phone shipments of 44.7 million. Revenue in China, which accounts for more than half of the company's total revenue, rose 36% quarter-over-quarter. Xiaomi is having an "extremely good growth" in China, said Lei, who was speaking ahead of the company's quarterly earnings results. "We are changing the industry and we are changing the model. We are not a commodity or an SKU seller," Lei said. Lei also said that the company is planning to enter the financial services and insurance market in China. "I can assure you we will be playing in the insurance market, and quite possibly in financial services as well," he said. "We are not going to be so predictable
