I am using Lightroom 5. It is very good for me. All the problems the author mentioned was not a problem with Lightroom 5. It is everything about the import/ save/ move process was a problem. I have more than 300k images in my catalog and it works quickly. I see no benefit of switching because it is working good for me. This review is fine. All in all there isn't much of an amplified gain to the user when considering the available alternatives. You really get very little more for the upgrade, which is likely to be a moot point anyways. You'll be a happy camper and probably won't regret the purchase. My Lightroom 5 is working much faster than LR 4. Even by the workload I have in LR 5. Every time I import images it is faster than before. Just one thing, the developer tool in the view/show panel doesn't launch. I've tried to enable in the inspector…but the button is not clickable and it seems that the tool will never be enabled. Thanks, Chaohui! Thanks for the great review! I have had many of these problems and I am happy that I have found someone else willing to share their experiences with you. Will look forward to Lightroom 5.1 and what the developers will add to this tool. I have had good luck with Lightroom 5. I use it for 3 cam rigs and 3 different MacBook Pro computers. There are times that it takes a while to load all the items but it's worth the wait. I have not had an issue with the developer toolbar not showing. Also I have tried all of the E-mail suggestions and it's been a breeze. I have switched many times between LR and Photoshop and it's pretty universal. I should also add I have seen very little difference with the older versions that have been released.
